1.1 Organization

Title

Institute for Information Law, IViR

General description

The Institute for Information Law (IViR), operational since 1986 and officially established in 1989 by decree of the University of Amsterdam (UvA) Executive Board, is the oldest research institute within the Faculty of Law. The institute's mission is to further the development of information law into a balanced framework that accommodates the needs and interests of the information society. Information law is a normative concept that integrates the law relating to the production, marketing, distribution and use of information. The institute is one of the largest research centres in the field of information law in the world. IViR has a strong presence in European and international academic networks through a broad array of activities, regularly engages in national and international research collaborations, and collaborates with non-legal disciplines such as economics, communications science, computer science, philosophy, digital humanities and the arts.

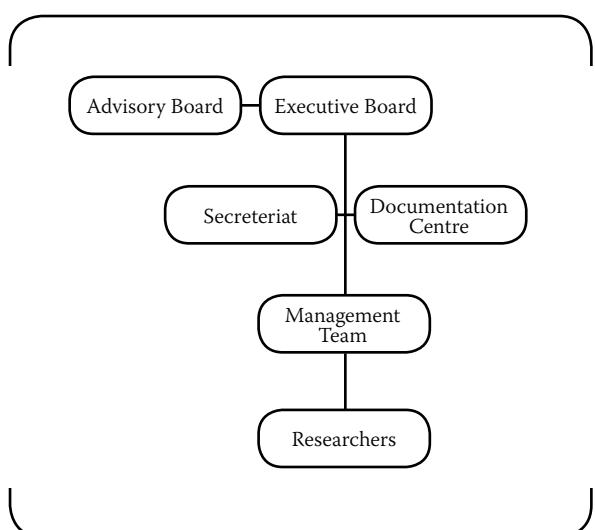

Information Influx

From 2-4 July 2014 IViR celebrated its 25th birthday with a major three-day international conference on current and future issues in information law and policy, Information Influx, with opening keynotes by EC Vice-President N. Kroes and Y. Benkler (Harvard U.), and keynotes and panel contributions by leading scholars in the field of information law worldwide. Approximately 250 information law scholars, practitioners, lawyers, professionals, and students from all over the world attended the anniversary conference.

IViR has a staff of currently about 40 full- and part-time researchers (21 fte) from legal studies, but also economics, social sciences and philosophy. (cf. Appendices 2.1). The institute has been steadily growing from the start of the reporting period (2009), when its staff counted approximately 25 members (15 fte). Today, the composition of staff is fairly balanced with four Professors, two Associate Professors (part-time), seven Assistant Professors (five part-time), the equivalent of seven postdoctoral researchers and six PhD candidates. The institute's operations and administration are supported by three administrative staff.

Composition

IViR has a staff of currently about 40 full- and part-time researchers (21 fte) from legal studies, but also economics, social sciences and philosophy. (cf. Appendices 2.1). The institute has been steadily growing from the start of the reporting period (2009), when its staff counted approximately 25 members (15 fte). Today, the composition of staff is fairly balanced with four Professors, two Associate Professors (part-time), seven Assistant Professors (five part-time), the equivalent of seven postdoctoral researchers and six PhD candidates. The institute's operations and administration are supported by three administrative staff.

Organization

IViR's organization is structured so as to optimally stimulate and coordinate the institute's research and output as well as to ensure research quality and valorization. The management of the institute lies in the hands of the four professors: Nico A.N.M. van Eijk (director), P. Bernt Hugenholtz (institute director until 2014, currently research director), Mireille

M.M. van Eechoud and Natali Helberger. Together they form the Board of Directors, which convenes every two weeks and is tasked with general scientific, financial and human resource management. Prospective and ongoing research projects are discussed and monitored at regular meetings of the institute's senior research staff.

Every research project is assigned to a principle investigator (PI) who is either one of the directors or a senior staff member, and oversees the implementation and reports to the senior staff meeting. The institute's research staff are encouraged to initiate and develop new research projects that fit within the confines of the research program, and to acquire funding, subject to approval of the Board of Directors. The institute's advisory board, which is composed of leading academics, business leaders and other experts, annually convenes with the Board and senior staff to discuss past performance and future research.

Financing

Information law is one of the Research Priority Areas (RPA's) of the University of Amsterdam and of the Faculty of Law, and as such the institute's research program is publicly financed (eerste geldstroom). IViR also participates in various research projects specifically financed by the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) and the European Union (tweede geldstroom). A third source of financing is commissioned research (derde geldstroom), usually for governmental organizations, such as the Dutch government, the Council of Europe, the European Parliament and Commission, the OECD, WIPO, etc. Occasionally, research is commissioned by non-governmental organisations or private actors. In all cases, IViR research is carried out subject to rigid rules of academic independence and transparency. With university funding under increasing pressure, IViR constantly faces the challenge of maintaining a balance between these sources of financing (cf. Appendices 2.3).

1.2 Overall strategy

JEROEN OERLEMANS

Two new professors of information law were inaugurated at UvA. On May 23, 2014, Mireille van Eechoud held her inaugural lecture on 'The lure of open data'. On September 19, 2014, Natali Helberger held her inaugural lecture on 'Media, users and algorithms: towards a new balance'.

Mission and vision

The institute's mission is to further the development of information law into a balanced framework that accommodates the needs and interests of the information society while respecting fundamental rights and freedoms. Information law is a normative concept that integrates the law relating to the production, marketing, distribution and use of information. The essence of the information law paradigm is that formerly distinct issues and sectors, which are intrinsically connected or converging, are treated within a single and coherent normative framework. The institute has played a pioneering role in this approach, which has been followed at home and abroad.

Paradigm and research methods

As the Association of universities in the Netherlands (VSNU) recognized in previous evaluations, the institute's early choice to focus on information (law) rather than on information technology (law) distinguishes its research program from comparable programs, in the Netherlands and abroad (cf. Section 1.6). The focus on the normative principles underpinning intellectual property law, freedom of expression, media regulation, consumer protection, privacy and data protection, among others, has led to valuable new insights.

IViR brings together all the disciplines necessary to study the normative, legal and regulatory frameworks that define, govern and condition information. The field of information law cuts across traditional legal boundaries and draws from research in other disciplines, such as economics and the social sciences. Research methods applied depend on the type and goals of a specific research project, using either descriptive, comparative, and normative/argumentative legal methodology, or (more often) a combination of these – mixed – methods. IViR research projects increasingly comprise empirical research components that require appropriate (e.g. statistical or qualitative) methods. In addition, IViR regularly carries out collaborative research projects with research institutes from other disciplines, such as communications science or cultural studies, incorporating non-legal methods.

Research profile and strategy

Information law is one of the RPAs expressly designated by UvA's Executive Board to "represent the very best the UvA has to offer in terms of research and are also areas in which the UvA is a worldwide leader". IViR has played an important role in establishing the university's profile as a world-leading university in the field of information and communications studies, and by initiating interdisciplinary collaborations with other UvA institutes and centres built bridges across the faculties.

The institute's mission is reflected in its research strategy, which aims at producing scholarly output that lives up to rigorous academic standards, while feeding into societal discussions and policy debates on information law-related issues at the national, European and international levels. This "360 degree approach" towards research and valorization is reflected in IViR's research strategy that values both cutting-edge scholarly publications and groundbreaking policy-oriented studies and reports. IViR initiates research only on the conditions that a new project, first, is situated within the domain defined in its research program, second, tackles an important research question of scientific value, and, third, has potential impact on the shaping of the information society. Following these principles, commissioned research contributes both to producing scientific excellence and societal relevance, while allowing the institute to grow even in times of tightening faculty budgets. All research activities undertaken by IViR conform to the Declaration of Scientific Independence of the Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Sciences and the relevant European principles on research integrity. IViR, therefore, refrains from providing consultancy services.

The present self-assessment concerns the 2009-2015 period. This covers the final two years of the institute's Research Program 2005-2010, and its current Research Program 2012-2016. The 2005-2010 Research Program encompassed seven distinct themes, which span the entire spectrum of information law:

IViR has initiated, and presently hosts (B. van der Sloot), the Amsterdam Platform for Privacy Research (APPR) that brings together more than 60 UvA privacy researchers from such diverse disciplines as law, communications science, informatics, medicine and philosophy. Under the co-leadership of N. van Eijk, the APPR has now twice organized the highly successful Amsterdam Privacy Conference (APC 2012 and 2015), which has quickly become Europe's leading interdisciplinary conference on privacy and data protection. APC 2015 drew more than 500 participants and included keynotes by A. Allen, J. Brill, G. Coleman, A. Etzioni, V. Mayer-Schönberger, D. Mulligan, H. Nissenbaum, M. Schrems, and L. Sweeney.

1. General development of information law theory
2. Freedom of expression and other communication freedoms
3. Protection of privacy
4. Intellectual property
5. Commercial communications
6. Government information
7. Media and telecommunications

In response to the research evaluation of Dutch Law Faculties in 2009, which was very positive for IViR (cf. Section 1.6), the research program of the institute was amended to further enhance its coherence and accentuate the interdependence of the different research themes. This has led to the ‘clustering’ of research themes in the current 2012-2016 research program. In our present research program (2012-2016) we set as specific targets to concentrate our research efforts on six different research topics or fields, two for each of the three ‘clusters’:

1. the creation and production of information
 - the boundaries of Intellectual Property
 - alternative compensation schemes
2. the transmission and communication of information
 - freedom of expression in the information age
 - regulating online intermediaries
3. the end use (consumption) of information
 - informational privacy: from autonomy to regulation?
 - accommodating the user in information law

Since informational transactions commonly transcend one or more clusters, these principles will often concurrently apply. Whereas each of these principles is enshrined in fundamental rights and represents a normative value, none is absolute. Rather, these rights and freedoms will tend to compete and, in many cases, even collide with each other, which calls for striking a balance between normative values and conflicting interests. Many of the salient issues of information law today concern these areas of colliding legal principles, e.g. defining the boundaries of copyright protection and use exception; secondary liability of online intermediaries; laws on defamation and hate speech; information flows and net neutrality; user’s privacy rights in behavioral targeting; et cetera.

1.3 Past and future targets

In pursuit of its mission, IViR has set three strategic goals: first, to produce cutting-edge scholarship and remain international leaders in our field; second, to conceive and develop legal concepts and doctrine that suit the requirements of the information society, and for that purpose help define policy agenda’s in our field, at the national, European and international levels; and, third, to (further) promote the paradigm of information law in law and legal scholarship worldwide. These goals are backed by its current research program and continue to guide IViR’s next research program.

A. Arnbak produced ground-breaking research on communications security, publishing his findings in the leading international journal of computer science, Communications of the ACM, in regular opinions in het Financieel Dagblad, and finally in his PhD thesis ‘Securing Private Communications’.

With the ambition to further consolidate IViR's leading position in the field of information law and policy in the Netherlands, Europe and beyond, specific targets are, first, to identify emerging legal challenges to the information society and be the first to address them through our research; second, to further expand and strengthen the institute's international academic network; and, third, to enhance multidisciplinary cooperations both within UvA and through external collaborations. Given the incessant growth of the information society, one of the major challenges shall be to apply a policy of managed development that allows the institute to meet the challenges for legal research and society, against the tide of budgetary constraints.

The institute's forthcoming research program (2017-2021) will preserve the 'clustered' approach towards information law, which has proven its robustness, while further pronouncing evidence-based research and interdisciplinary methods. The institute has successfully embarked on new research projects that tackle major challenges and set the research agenda, for example, in the field of personalized communications in politics, commerce and health; the growing and changing role of data in the information value chain (commercial use, communications security, electronic communications, open data and governmental use of data); the growing divide between legal and social norms in the field of intellectual property; the diverse but central roles of information intermediaries; et cetera. Complementing the institute's exceptional strength in intellectual property law, the institute will continue to expand its expertise in public policies and regulations across sectors of the information-driven society and attendant users' right, in particular the growing relevance of legal research on privacy and data protection. Owing to the dynamics of information law, IViR's long-term research programs leaves the necessary room for maneuver and agility to respond to relevant developments, emerging research questions and considerations of societal relevance.

IMAGE BY ANNE HELMOND

IViR has played a pioneering role in developing and promoting Creative Commons licenses in the Netherlands and across Europe. On 8 January 2010, L. Lessig (Harvard U.) received an honorary doctorate from the UvA for his important contributions to the field of information law, in particular as regards open content licensing.

1.4 Applicable performance indicators

IViR's performance resonates in its commitment to academic research that is both scientifically excellent and yields societal impact. Rather than fostering a mono-culture of scientific publishing, IViR encourages its research staff to commit to a broad spectrum of integrated activities that combine producing high-quality scholarly output and high-impact policy-oriented studies, initiating and actively engaging in the international academic debate and societal dialog, in addition to successfully competing for awards and research funding. Based on the sample of output indicators created by the Faculty of Law's Scientific Advisory Committee following the Standard Evaluation Protocol 2015-2021, the institute has selected the following performance indicators for each quality domain on research quality and relevance to society, respectively.

Research quality

Research products for peers

Participation and impact in the national, European and international academic debate is an important element of our research strategy, which is measurable through the academic output in the form of publications. IViR maintains a list of high-quality and relevant academic journals in the field of information law, based on a variety of criteria, namely peer review, ranking (where available), international scope, academic prestige, impact, open access, quality and reputation of the editorial board, and circulation. Advanced students, PhD candidates and young scholars are encouraged to start publishing early in their career, and turn project research into academic publications, under the supervision of senior staff members.

Use of research products and marks of recognition

There is a lack meaningful metric indicators for use and impact of academic legal publications, and download figures are not fully reliable. Nevertheless, IViR staff researchers maintain an active presence on platforms dedicated to provide optimal (open) access to academic research, such as SSRN, in addition to consequently maintaining an open repository of our research output on the IViR website and UvA's DARE publication database.

To IViR, peer recognition is a direct and emblematic reflection of the use and impact of its staff researchers' publications. Official recognition in the form of prizes, honors and other awards is such an indicator of peer recognition, particularly for early career researchers. Aside from collaborative research funding, personal research grants are also important marks of recognition of peers, since these are usually awarded after a rigorous and highly competitive international peer-selection process. Finally, invitations are significant marks of peer recognition. These include invitations to give keynotes and invited talks; invitations to attend scholarly workshops, symposia and roundtables all over the world; invitations to participate in European and international project consortia; visiting scholarships (both outgoing and incoming); requests to act as reviewers and referees of publications, dissertations and research proposals; and memberships of editorial boards, scientific committees and expert groups, and academic assessment committees.

Relevance to society

IViR has a rich history of bringing legal scholarship to broader society, and ensuring its research programmes identify and address societal challenges at home, in Europe and further abroad. Our commitment shows itself in the variety of 'research products' we provide to societal groups.

Research products for societal target groups

IViR's main research products for societal target groups are policy-oriented studies and reports for European and intergovernmental institutions, and the Dutch government. IViR's policy-oriented reports and studies are often combined with invitation-only workshops for policy makers, stakeholders and academics. This is usually accompanied by publications in professional journals and annotations. IViR research is also increasingly reported by way of blogs and the social media.

Use of research products and marks of recognition

An important indicator of the use of our research by societal groups is the extent to which IViR is approached during the formation stage of larger research consortia applying for funding. Often this will include projects in cooperation with societal groups.

Invitations to join advisory or steering boards of organizations and groups are other indicators of the usefulness of our research for societal groups, as are invitations to give lectures and trainings. Memberships of governmental, European or international advisory boards and of civil society advisory boards are other indicators of recognition by societal groups. Contributing to publications in news media and blogs, or writing op-eds, are also important indicators.

1.5 Results obtained

Publications

Over the past seven years, IViR has produced a reported total of 1.245 publications, an average annual output of 9.75 publications per fte (cf. Appendices 2.2.). IViR delivers on its commitment to publishing in international, peer-reviewed journals in addition to other forms of publications, i.e. monographs, edited books, book chapters, PhD theses, conference papers, professional publications and publications aimed at the general public. In the reporting period IViR staff produced 213 peer-reviewed publications (1.7 publication per fte per year), showing a clear upwards trend towards more publications in international peer-reviewed journals. In 2012, peer-reviewed publications in national journals still outnumbered international publications, but since then this ratio was reversed. For example, the year 2015 generated 23 international peer reviewed publications and 11 national peer reviewed articles.

IViR publications have also appeared in several high ranking, non-legal international peer reviewed journals. This is a direct reflection of IViR's ambition to further develop its multi-disciplinary research strategy. For example, while in 2012 we published in only three non-legal journals, the number went up to nine in 2015, which marks a fifth (26 percent) of IViR's overall peer-reviewed publications in that year.

Over the reporting period 14 PhD theses were completed and subsequently published (W. Steenbruggen, A. van Rooijen, W. Sakulin, H. Fischer, S. van Gompel, J. van Hoboken, A. Ramalho, E. Janssen, F. Zuiderveen Borgesius, J. Poort, A. Arnbak, L. Pessers, H. Hijmans, and C. Angelopoulos), in the form of books and/or journal publications. Two of these won prizes above the university and local level. For his thesis on 'Search Engine Freedom' J. van Hoboken received the Erasmus Research Prize 2014. F. Zuiderveen Borgesius's thesis, 'Behavioural Targeting: How to Regulate', earned him the René Cassin Thesis Prize of the International Institute of Human Rights in 2015.

The peer-reviewed paper by A. Arnbak, N. van Eijk and others, 'Security Collapse in the HTTPS Market', was downloaded over 60.000 times from the ACM archive. With 17.482 downloads, the study 'User-created content: supporting a participative information society' by N. Helberger and L. Guibault and others was the most downloaded document in 2015 from the UvA's open digital repository DARE. A. Arnbak's PhD thesis 'Securing Private Communications' will be the very first book published by Wolters Kluwer (Information Series) under a Creative Commons license.

Results in a nutshell:

- 213 peer reviewed publications
- 75 international speakers in IViR Speakers' Series
- 42 International workshops and 4 international conferences
- 2 inaugural lectures
- 12 PhDs, two award winning
- Major awards and grants (NWO Veni, HERA, NWO Top, NWO Top Talent, Marie Curie, ERC)
- 10 International Summer Courses
- Most downloaded UvA paper (60.000+)
- Most downloaded paper from UvA Repository DARE

Open access

IViR has a long-standing commitment for open access publishing and an institutional culture to make research output openly available. Indeed, examining and solving the many legal and policy issues raised by open access publishing and open data remains an important research topic of IViR scholarship. The institute follows a three-tiered approach to open access publishing. First, the quality of the publication outlet, its thematic niche and audience, and its actual open access policy are all seen as relevant factors. Second, IViR staff regularly contributes to open access publications as reviewers, editorial members and scientific advisory board members. Third, since its very early days, IViR has pursued a policy of publishing nearly all its research output on its website, UvA's DARE publications database, and other semi-open scholarly platforms such as SSRN and academia.edu. Selected IViR publications are faring extremely well in open access.

In 2011, S. van Gompel's thesis on the history of formalities in international copyright law inspired a transatlantic dialogue between leading copyright scholars in Europe and the U.S. in the form of a symposium in Amsterdam (7 July 2012) and a major conference at UC Berkeley (18-19 April 2013). Both events were organized in cooperation with the Berkeley Centre for Law and Technology at UC Berkeley.

IViR staff is actively involved in editorial boards of established open access journals, or had an active role in setting up new such journals, such as the Journal of Information Policy (N. Helberger), Journal of Intellectual Property, Information Technology and Electronic Commerce Law (JIPITEC) (L. Guibault), and the Internet Policy Review (N. Helberger). Open access journals in which IViR researchers have published include the Berkeley Journal of Law and Technology and International Journal for Law and Information Technology, among others.

Active role in contributing to, and stimulating the international academic debate

Besides academic publishing, the organization of and participation in academic workshops, symposia and conferences are forms of engaging in the international academic debate, and one in which IViR performed very well in the reporting period. IViR organized four international academic conferences, including the highly successful Information Influx conference (2014), and two editions of the Amsterdam Privacy Conference (APC 2013 and 2015), which has developed into one of the world's leading multi-disciplinary conferences in the field of privacy and data protection.

The large-scale multidisciplinary HERA-funded 'Of Authorship and Originality' project, a collaboration between IViR, Cambridge University (CIPIL) and the University of Bergen (Info-Media Institute), not only produced multiple peer-reviewed publications and an open-access published book volume, but also a public conference organized by IViR in 2013.

N. Helberger was awarded a Starting Grant of the European Research Council (ERC) for her research project "Profiling and targeting news readers – implications for the democratic role of the digital media, user rights and public information policy". A Starting Grant is a personal grant of 1.5 million euros meant to support talented researchers for a period of five years while they conduct research.

S. van Gompel's groundbreaking thesis on formalities in copyright law inspired a transatlantic dialogue between leading copyright scholars in Europe and the United States in the form of a symposium in Amsterdam (2012) and a major conference at UC Berkeley (2013). Both were products of our ongoing cooperation with the Berkeley Centre for Law and Technology of UC Berkeley.

In the reporting period IViR organized 42 international workshops (averaging six per year), spanning the entire range of topics of our research program: from national security and 'big data', to alternative compensation

On March 13, 2012, B. Hugenholtz delivered the Seventh Annual International Intellectual Property Lecture at Cambridge University (Emmanuel College), on 'Fair Use in Europe: in Search of Flexibilities in Copyright'. On November 7, 2013, Bernt Hugenholtz gave the 2nd Annual Peter Jaszi Distinguished Lecture at American University, Washington College of Law, on 'Flexing Authors' Rights'.

systems for copyright, open content and fundamental rights in a digital environment (cf. Appendices 2.10).

With 75 speakers over the past seven years, the IViR Speakers Series was also very productive (cf. Appendices 2.10). The IViR Speakers Series is a venue for researchers and thinkers from different disciplines all over the world to present and discuss their research in an informal setting. Next to providing a platform for the presentation of new research ideas and forging an academic network, the speaker series has resulted in a number of new collaborations and research projects.

IViR scholars were regularly invited to present their work at leading international conferences in our field, such as the annual Privacy Law Scholars Conference (George Washington U. & UC Berkeley), the annual Fordham Intellectual Property Law and Policy Conference, the annual Computers, Privacy and Data Protection conference (CPDP), and many others.

Awards and personal research grants

Prizes, honours and awards are not yet a common phenomenon in (information) law, and often confined to masters and PhD theses or early career researchers. IViR is proud of its students and young scholars who collected several awards during the reporting period (cf. Appendices 2.7). In addition to the prizes awarded to our PhD students mentioned above, two IViR students won national awards for best master thesis in the field of internet-related law. IViR research master student (currently PhD candidate) V. Breemen and A. Arnbak also won the award for best thesis of the University of Amsterdam in all disciplines.

Personal research grants are an important measure of the success and peer recognition of individual researchers, and of IViR as a host organization. Between 2009 and 2015 institute staff were awarded a sizeable number of the much-coveted personal research grants (cf. Appendices 2.7).

- Two NWO Veni grants, a highly competitive talent grant for young postdoctoral researchers from the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) (S. van Gompel, N. Helberger)
- One NWO Top Talent grant to enable an excellent Young Researcher to write his PhD (B. van der Sloot)
- Three Marie Curie individual fellowships (K. Irion, B. Bodo, T. Margoni)
- One NWO Humanities in the European Research Area (HERA) grant, in collaboration with Cambridge Univ. and Univ. of Bergen (M. van Eechoud)
- One TOP Project Grant from NWO, one of the few existing NWO talent grants that is granted in recognition of the achievements of an entire research group (lead: B. Hugenholtz)
- One ERC Starting Grant (N. Helberger)

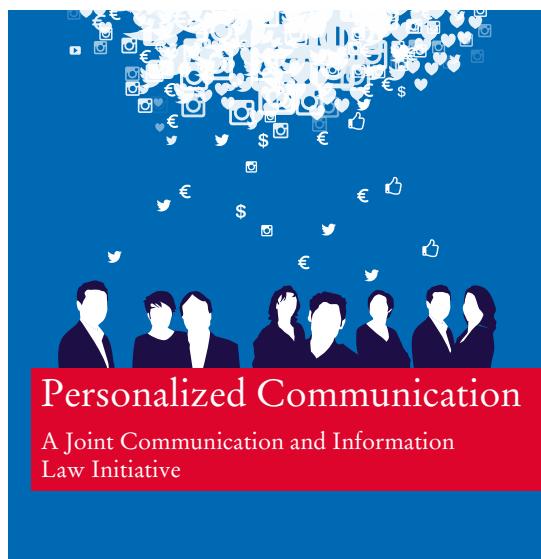

All of these are highly competitive, with an average rate of success between 6 and 12 percent, and are only awarded for proposals that promise groundbreaking and innovative research to the top 10 percent of researchers, after a thorough peer-reviewed selection and interview process. In addition, several IViR researchers successfully applied for grants for visiting scholarships at renowned universities such as Harvard, Berkeley and Princeton.

Multidisciplinary, pioneering research

As the list of personal grants also demonstrate, IViR has been very active in setting out, and securing funding for a number of pioneering research lines. A distinctive feature of many of these lines is their multidisciplinary character. For example, M. van Eechoud's HERA project queried how insights from literary theory, music studies, film/visual studies and other disciplines in the humanities can help articulate copyright norms that enable sustainable creative practices in the digital environment. B. van der Sloot's Top Talent-financed PhD work integrates approaches towards privacy from law and virtue ethics. Hugenholtz' TOP project on alternative compensation systems combines approaches from the legal and social sciences with economic analyses. N. Helberger's ERC-funded work on news media personalization cuts across information law, communications science and media studies.

Groundbreaking research was done on the topic of file sharing. A 2009 interdisciplinary study by IViR, SEO and TNO ('Ups and downs. Economic and cultural effects of file sharing on music, film and games') generated substantial international attention and directly influenced policy making. Follow-up studies by Joost Poort et. al. showed important shifts in file sharing behavior.

In 2015, IViR researchers C.W. Handke , B. Bodó , J.-J. Vallbé published the first results of a large-scale consumer survey on alternative copyright compensation schemes. According to the survey, a majority of Dutch consumers is willing to pay for the right to freely share copyright protected content. For recorded music only, such scheme could increase the welfare of rights holders and users in the Netherlands by over 600 million Euro per year. The survey is part of the institute's multidisciplinary project Alternatives to Copyright Enforcement, funded by the NWO 'TOP' program.

In 2014, IViR entered into an institutional cooperation with the Amsterdam School of Communications Research (ASCoR), a world leader in its field, with a research initiative on 'Personalised Communications' that was awarded substantial additional RPA funding from UvA. The joint initiative currently involves eight postdocs from legal studies and communications sciences engaging in joint research on the implications of algorithms and Big Data on users, society and law. The group will soon be expanded with four other PhD candidates.

Active role in academic service and excellence

IViR's researchers take an active part in academic service, thus contributing to academic excellence to the benefit of the wider academic community. Across institutions, several IViR senior staff members are on advisory boards of leading research institutes. They are also on the organization or scientific committees of the leading international conferences in the field. IViR staff and researchers can also be found on the editorial boards of all leading Dutch-language journals in our field and also on the boards of a range of international journals.¹

As expert reviewers for e.g. the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO), Fonds Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek Flanders (FWO), Israel Science Foundation, Danish Science Foundation, Swiss Science Foundations and for a wide range of academic journals, IViR staff have also extensively contributed to the academic peer review process.

Societal relevance

IViR's societal impact strategy has three prongs: to translate research into practice, to provide direct policy input, and to take part in public debate.

Translating research into (legal) practice

This type of outreach activity is aimed predominantly at (legal) professionals. Our insights from research enable us to signal and predict new developments in law that are of clear benefit to a large range of professionals. Means used are publications and events. IViR contributes articles, case comments and annotations to inform professionals on current developments in information law, both in the Netherlands and in Europe. IViR scholars also regularly write case comments in national and foreign legal (online) journals s.a. Nederlandse Jurisprudentie (the largest and most reputable Dutch case reporter). The institute also runs the specialist Kluwer Copyright Blog with a broad international readership. IViR (T. McGonagle) is a partner organisation of the European Audiovisual Observatory in Strasburg, France. This is a publication-oriented partnership, which includes conducting research and coordinating a network of national media law experts for the Observatory's legal publications.

Since 2009, sixteen new volumes – authored by IViR researchers and reputed international scholars – were published in the Information Law Series, a series of academic monographs and collections published by Kluwer Law International (General Editor: B. Hugenholtz).

IViR staff also play an active role in learned societies in the domain of information law, which bring together legal professionals and scholars. N. van Eijk chairs the Dutch Society of Media and Communications Law (VMC). M. van Eechoud is board member of the Dutch Data Protection Authority, the Copyright Society and Executive Committee member of ALAI, the international copyright society. B. Hugenholtz was until 2012 vice-chairman of the Dutch Copyright Society.

IViR's outreach activities include our successful international summer courses, and other post-graduate training activities, e.g. for the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO). Since 2000, IViR organizes a one-week Annual Summer Course on International Copyright Law (cf. Appendices 2.10). From 2012, IViR also offers an Annual Summer Course on Privacy Law and Policy. Both courses are aimed at a mix of high-level professionals, government administrators and advanced scholars, and have received both commercial success and critical acclaim. The summer courses are not only important vehicles of sharing knowledge with society, but also help expand IViR's ever growing international network. Both summer courses benefit from funding by the Open Society Foundations' (OSF) information program, which enables participation by members of civil society, in particular from developing countries of the global South.

The success of our student Clinic deserves special mention as it indicates the extent to which we succeed in bridging three areas: research, teaching and knowledge transfer, together, but also: how our activities can be directly turned into benefit for start-ups.

Providing direct policy input

The most important, prong of our outreach strategy is to help inform policy-making by way of independent and critical policy-oriented research. We do this mainly through studies, events and hearings (Cf. Appendices 2.9 and 2.10). High on impact are studies on commission from governments and non-governmental organizations, national and international (30 commissioned projects). These include the Dutch ministries of Economic Affairs, Security and Justice and Education, Culture and Science, but also the European Commission, European Parliament, the Dutch presidency of the EU, the Council of Europe and WIPO. The institute's studies and reports are often very influential in that they have actually resulted in concrete legal and policy initiatives – immediate testimony of how IViR's research is useful to society.

We also pursue policy-oriented work independently of commissions. For example, in response to the public outcry over privacy infringements in the wake of the NSA scandals, a team of IViR staff formulated standards for independent oversight and transparency of national intelligence services (2015). Another example is the HERMES study in cooperation with the Hans Bredow Institut (Hamburg) on the future of European audiovisual regulation. Private sector funders like Google, RTL Group, Microsoft, and non-profits like Open Society Foundation, Surfnet and the SIDN-fund see the importance of such independent work and are prepared to contribute funding.

Organizing and participating in workshops and review sessions is part and parcel of the projects we do for the public sector (cf. Appendices 2.10). Examples include a seminar for policy makers of Dutch central government departments on legal aspects of public sector information re-use (organized with the Ministry of the Interior, 2015) and various workshops co-organized with the Dutch data protection authority as part of the Building Bridges initiative to further transatlantic policy dialogue on data protection.

IViR staff are also regularly invited to hearings by parliamentary committees of the Dutch parliament and the European Parliament, e.g. on reform of the Dutch media act, on data protection and surveillance, on the allocation of frequencies for broadcasting and

B. Hugenholtz was the main initiator of the high-profile 'Wittem Group', a group of European copyright scholars that produced the European Copyright Code – a draft of a EU Copyright Law – in 2012. The Code is widely cited in policy documents and academic literature, and plays a central role in the current debate on possible unification of copyright in Europe.

L. Guibault and C. Handke were both members of the Expert Group that advised the European Commission on text and data mining, and co-authors of the Group's final report. The 2014 report, inter alia, recommends a special exception on data mining, which is expected to be part of forthcoming amendments to the EU Copyright in the Information Society Directive.

mobile communications and on cybersecurity. Likewise, staff is regularly invited to speak at events, in the reporting period they were hosted by the European Data Protection Supervisor, European Parliament, the EU Presidency, the European Commission, various Dutch ministries and WIPO. Expert opinion also takes the form of written work, e.g. McGonagle was rapporteur of the committee of experts that prepared the draft Council of European Recommendation on the protection and safety of journalists (2015). Several IViR staff members testified before the national and European parliaments.

In public debate

IViR actively takes part in the public debate in Dutch and foreign (news) media and public platforms. During the reporting period IViR staff and researchers appeared more than 20 times on Dutch television and radio in prime time news broadcasts. CBS News interviewed A. Arnbak on surveillance following the NSA scandal. IViR experts are also regularly interviewed and quoted in the international press, such as the New York Times (B. Hugenholtz on copyright terms, S. van Gompel on the Anne Frank diary dispute, N. van Eijk on security and privacy after the Paris terrorist attacks), the Financial Times (A. Arnbak on Snowden), Der Spiegel and Wired (F. Zuiderveen Borgesius on academics against mass surveillance).

IViR produced over 110 contributions, in the form of articles, interviews, columns and op-eds, to the print media, many of which for leading national newspapers such as NRC, Volkskrant, Financiële Dagblad, Algemeen Dagblad, Trouw, and De Correspondent. In addition, researchers regularly contributed to blogs, such as the well-visited Kluwer Copyright Blog (managing editor: L. Guibault) and other online media.

IViR also regularly reached out to the general public by organizing and engaging in public discussion meetings. For example, in the reporting period IViR staff spoke at Spui25, the university's public debate program, four times (of which 12 times in 2015).

Case-studies

Case 1: The rise of the digital consumer: giving the user a place in information law

IViR has for many years played a pioneering role in exploring the legal position of users on the interface between consumer law and data protection law, intellectual property law, media- and telecommunications law. In 2011, in collaboration with the faculty's Centre for the Study of European Contract Law (CESECL) and an economic partner, IViR staff conducted extensive comparative research into consumer concerns and the state of legal protection. The results of the study fed directly into the drafting process of the EU Consumer Rights Directive (2011/83/EU), and several recommendations made their way into the directive. The study is also repeatedly mentioned in the explanatory memorandum accompanying the proposed Directive on Contracts for the Supply of Digital Content.

Anticipating the Snowden revelations, a 2012 IViR study on cloud computing and the U.S. Patriot Act by J. van Hoboken, A. Arnbak and N. van Eijk triggered a global academic debate on how European data flows have become vulnerable to security breach, as data are moved to U.S. controlled 'clouds'. The study was also covered extensively in Dutch and foreign media. E. Dommering actively contributed to the Dutch public debate on 'hate speech' with several op-eds in leading newspapers.

Case 2: Copyright reform

The institute plays a very influential role in shaping national and European copyright law and policy. IViR has produced several major and important studies and reports for the European Commission, including a highly critical assessment of the EU copyright ‘acquis’ that was published in Kluwer’s Information Law Series (2009). One of the study’s main conclusions was a call for unification, rather than more harmonization, of EU copyright law. This idea has been subsequently endorsed by the majority of legal scholars in Europe. In recent policy documents (e.g. the EC Communication on ‘modernizing copyright’ of December, 2015) the European Commission now unreservedly subscribes to this once controversial long-term vision.

The new Dutch law on copyright contracts (enacted in 2015) is another example of IViR’s research slowly but surely having its impact on the law of copyright. The act lays down special provisions that protect creators and performing artists in their contractual dealings with intermediaries. Already in 2004, the Dutch government commissioned research by L. Guibault and B. Hugenholtz. Many of the IViR report’s recommendations eventually made their way into the law.

For the Dutch Ministry of Education, Culture and Science, B. Hugenholtz, L. Guibault and S. van Gompel prepared a report on extended collective licensing schemes (2014) as a solution to the prohibitive costs of clearing individual rights for large-scale digitization of cultural heritage. In October 2015, the Minister announced she will present a legislative proposal directly based on the findings of the study.

Case 3: Implementation of ‘cookie’ legislation

In 2009, the EU legislative strengthened the ‘cookie’ provision of the e-Privacy Directive 2002/58/EC. Cookies are used to track user preferences and behaviour online. During the implementation phase the Dutch Telecommunications Regulator (OPTA) asked technology research institution TNO and IViR (N. Helberger, B. van der Sloot, N. van Eijk) to conduct a study into the use of cookie technology in practice and the implications of the new rules for behavioural targeting. The findings brought to light shortcomings in the effectiveness of regulation and suggested reform. The reports’ submission to the Dutch parliament in 2011 fuelled an already lively public debate. Stakeholders in advertising, marketing and publishing publicly contested its findings. However, the Dutch Data Protection Authority shared the researchers’ concern over the use of tracking cookies without proper consent and made recommendations to the government. The stricter provision was eventually enacted in the Dutch Telecommunications Act.

1.6 Own assessment of quality, relevance and viability

As the previous sections demonstrate, the years 2009-2015 have been incredibly productive for IViR, and a general self-assessment therefore can only be very positive. In the course of the past seven years the institute’s “360 degree approach” towards research and valorization has generated both cutting-edge scholarly output and groundbreaking policy-oriented studies and reports, only a few highlights of which could be mentioned in this report. As the previous sections also illustrate, IViR’s research strategy towards increased multidisciplinarity is clearly coming to fruition. The following self-assessment covers IViR’s research quality and relevance to society before turning to the viability of its research strategy in the future.

Research quality

During the reporting period IViR has produced a large volume of high-quality and high-impact scientific work, much of which has broken new ground. Judged against the performance indicators identified in 1.4, the results of IViR research, as summarized in section 1.5, are invariably high, not just in terms of traditional scientific publishing or in open content publishing, but in terms of overall scientific output, as measured by peer recognition and the other quality indicators.

The more focused and coherent research strategy that IViR has pursued since the start of its current research program has undoubtedly contributed to this success. Much of IViR's research output in the 2009-2015 period can be located within one of the six prioritized areas of research (the boundaries of IP, alternative compensation schemes, freedom of expression in the information age, regulating online intermediaries, informational privacy, accommodating the user in information law), and important scientific contributions have been made precisely in these prioritized areas.

Importantly, most of IViR's externally funded or commissioned research projects have led to peer-reviewed publications in national and – increasingly – international journals, although finding the time to convert studies and reports into published articles can sometimes be a challenge for IViR staff and researchers with an ongoing heavily charged research agenda. Another challenge is to strike the appropriate balance between national and international publications, and between writing articles and producing book chapters or even treatises. Defining an ideal publication strategy is yet another challenge in a field where objective means of measuring publication quality and impact are all but absent, and in times when scientific publishing is effectively being reinvented.

Relevance to society

As Section 1.5 amply demonstrates, IViR research in the 2009-2015 period has had, and continues to have, a massive impact on the law and policies relating to the information society, both at the national and the European levels. The results of IViR are visible everywhere: in recent laws adopted (or about to be adopted) in the Netherlands, in new EU directives, in policy papers of the European Commission and the European Parliament, etc. IViR's constant outreach to target groups (law makers, supervisory agencies, stakeholders, civil society), and to society at large, is also quantifiable in terms of its visibility in the news media, and in public discourse. The ever-growing relevance of IViR's research field in the information-driven society continues the mutually beneficial engagement with societal stakeholders.

Viability

Since IViR first put information law on the map in the 1980's, the field has steadily grown and is now universally accepted as an academic legal discipline. With the information society constantly posing new legal challenges, the continued viability and vitality of the information law paradigm, and of the institute's research program, are almost a given. As the institute's results over the past seven years demonstrate, and the results of previous assessments confirm, IViR's research program and its "360 degree approach" towards research and valorization are fully sustainable for the years to come.

Previous external assessments

Previous external assessments (visitatiess) of IViR's research output and program (cf. Appendices 2.6) have, without exception, been extremely positive. In the 1995-2000 VSNU assessment the institute's research output and program were awarded 4 (out of 5) points for academic quality, and 4-5 for (societal) relevance and sustainability/viability. The results of the 2001-2008 assessment were even better: 4.5 for quality, productivity and relevance, and 4,25 for sustainability. Judged against IViR's own prior performance, we believe that over the current reporting period (2009-2015) we have, yet again, made important advances, both in terms of research quality, social relevance, viability and multidisciplinary collaboration.

1.7 Relevant environmental factors and developments

Of course, the institute's future is contingent upon various environmental factors, in particular those concerning internal and external financing.

A number of strategies presented in both the Minister of Education's *Wetenschapvisie 2025*² (Research Vision 2025) and UvA *Instellingsplan 2015-2020*³ mesh well with IViR's 360° approach to research. The UvA strives to maintain a high public profile as a 'research university', and contribute to societal innovation. The university actively promotes multi-disciplinary cooperation across research groups. This has helped IViR to successfully secure central university funding for a joint project with the Amsterdam School for Communications Research (ASCOR). In its Instellingsplan, the University commits itself to further develop the RPAs and make them the cornerstone of the university profile. This is in line with the Ministry's Research Vision 2025, which asks universities to strengthen their profiles. Of course, the RPA information law fits perfectly in the UvA's 'Information and Communication' profile.

IViR's growth has helped to guarantee financial continuity, even in times of budgetary constraints on the part of the faculty and university. However, it inevitably comes with problems of scalability, ranging from finding adequate institute housing to offering sufficiently promising career paths – including tenure tracks – to newly hired (junior or senior) researchers. With direct university funding expected to decrease rather than grow in the years to come, the institute's continuous growth raises the spectre of over-dependence on secondary and tertiary income. The increasing integration of researchers from non-legal disciplines adds complexity to these issues of human resource management.

Until 2012 the institute could rely on a regular allocation of faculty-funded (employed) PhD positions to realize its (highly successful) PhD program. During this period, on average, five to seven PhD researchers were employed at IViR at any given time. Budget cuts at the faculty level, unfortunately, have put the allocation of faculty-funded PhD positions temporarily on hold. The institute is successful in acquiring external funding, but opportunities are limited and cannot make up for this loss.

The current focus in the EU and the Netherlands on innovation projects (EU's Horizon 2020, the so-called 'Topsectoren' policy in the Netherlands) leaves little room for fundamental legal research. However, the focus of these programmes is predominantly on innovation and technology development, and legal/normative issues are often treated as merely incidental questions. IViR has recognized this and is investing time and resources to represent the interests of legal research in, for example, Horizon 2020 (L. Guibault, N. Helberger), but a more concerted and pro-active approach on the side of the Dutch law faculties would be needed. Nevertheless, there are Horizon 2020 domains (e.g. Joint Programme on Cultural Heritage⁴) in which interesting projects can be done. The continuation of the Marie Curie programme also offers opportunities.

Whereas currently relevant national and EU research funding schemes are not geared towards legal research, the development of the Dutch 'National Research Agenda' (Nationale wetenschapsagenda),⁵ in which NWO partners with the Royal Academy of Sciences (KNAW) and the Association of Universities (VSNU), has some promise for IViR. The initiative currently elaborates 'routes' that bring together clusters of questions raised in the public consultations of 2015. Among these are 'routes' that have a clear relation to our research agenda, such as 'Responsible use of big data'. It is however still unclear to what extent the National Research Agenda will actually lead to substantial changes in the way funds are re-allocated across disciplines.

Institute housing has been an unstable external factor. During the reporting period the Institute had to move locations twice – in 2009 from its long-time Rokin location to the Oostindisch Huis, and early 2016 to its present location on the Binnengasthuis-terrein.

1.8 SWOT analysis and benchmark/positioning

Strengths	Weaknesses	Opportunities	Threats
Unique expertise in a broad range of national and European information law-related issues.	Lack of general or field-specific legal research funding programs at European and national level.	Consistent growth of the information society constantly creates new challenges to the law, guaranteeing new research opportunities for many years to come.	Budget cuts at Faculty level may lead to over-dependence on secondary and tertiary income.
Critical mass: IViR is the largest research facility in the field of information law in Europe.	Faculty-funded PhD program currently on hold; new PhD positions need to be externally funded.	Norm setting in the field of information law will increasingly occur at European and international level, creating additional opportunities.	Inadequate central funding for administrative support.
Rich experience with inter- and multidisciplinary research collaborations.			Growing demands of research bureaucracy (e.g. constant reporting and evaluations).
Excellent national, European and international reputation and track record – both in academia and in society at large; IViR is an established ‘brand’.		Trend towards evidence-based policy making generates increasing demand for multi- and interdisciplinary research.	Lack of tenured senior staff positions makes it difficult to offer mid-carrier level staff long-term career perspective.
Extensive international scientific network of partner institutions and correspondents.		National Science Agenda (Nationale wetenschapsagenda) may create new funding opportunities at national level.
Well integrated in society, broad societal network, high social relevance of research program.		Research master program in Information Law offers unique chances to attract excellent students across the Netherlands and abroad, and scout promising PhD candidates.
Very motivated and productive international research staff; stimulating and open-minded research environment.
Excellent research infrastructure, including unique Documentation Centre.

Benchmarks

The institute and its research program have no counterparts in the Netherlands. The Tilburg University's Institute for Law, Technology and Society (TILT) focuses on legal-social issues related to technology (e.g. bio- and nanotechnology, neurotechnology and robotics) rather than on the information society, although there are certain common fields of interest, such as privacy.

Outside the Netherlands, IViR has institutional and informal co-operations with research centers with partly corresponding research programs: Berkeley Center for Law and Technology (UC Berkeley, U.S.), Max Planck Institute for Innovation and Competition (Munich, DE), Information Law Institute (New York University, U.S.), Hans Bredow Institut for Media Research (Hamburg, DE), Leuven Centre for IT & IP Law (KU Leuven, BE), Berkman Center for Internet & Society (Harvard University, U.S.), Center for Internet and Society (Stanford University, U.S.); Annenberg School of Communications (University of Pennsylvania, U.S.), Norwegian Research Centre for Computers and Law (NRCCCL) (University of Oslo, NOR), Haifa Center for Law and Technology (University of Haifa Law School, ISR), Center for Intellectual Property and Information Law (CIPIL)(University of Cambridge, U.K.), Institute for Information Science and Media Studies (University of Bergen, NOR), Centre for Media, Data and Society (Central European University, HU), Centre for Media Pluralism and Media Freedom (European University Institute, IT), Alexander von Humboldt Institute for Internet and Society (HIIG) (Berlin, DE), Law and Technology Center (Hong Kong University), and Oxford Internet Institute (University of Oxford, UK).

Het programma Informatierecht van het Instituut voor Informatierecht van de UvA heeft in zoverre een eigen karakter, dat het niet de technologie als ordenend principe heeft genomen, maar informatie als beschermwaardig goed. Door deze “technologieonafhankelijke benadering” heeft het programma zich al in de vorige beoordelingsperiode (VSNU 1996, p. 126) onderscheiden van ander, ook buitenlands onderzoek. Het onderzoek bestrijkt juridische aspecten van de productie, opslag, verspreiding en het gebruik van informatie. Terugkerende elementen zijn globalisering, private regulering en het vervloeien van scheidslijnen zowel tussen ‘oude’ en jongere media als tussen openbare en private communicatievormen.

Het programma heeft een kwalitatief sterke bezetting. De relevantie van het programma is evident. In de beoordelingsperiode is betrekkelijk veel derde geldstroom onderzoek uitgevoerd. Het programma wordt met een vier als goed gewaardeerd; het biedt duidelijk richting aan het onderzoek.

De kernpublicaties zijn in het algemeen van goede kwaliteit. Diverse van de kernpublicaties kunnen worden aangemerkt als belangrijke werken op het desbetreffende terrein. De boeken en bundels zijn vrijwel zonder uitzondering goed geordend en overzichtelijk. Vernieuwende aspecten zitten met name in de ordening van de inzichten en het volgen van de nieuwe ontwikkelingen van met name Ict en Internet. Enkele van de publicaties blijven iets te veel beschrijvend; sommige moeten eerder als vakliteratuur worden aangemerkt omdat ze alleen voor de rechtspraktijk relevant zijn maar geen nieuwe inzichten met zich meebrengen. Als vakliteratuur zijn ze wel van zeer goed gehalte.

De systematische aandacht die binnen het Instituut voor informatierecht wordt besteed aan het telecommunicatierecht, heeft aan het einde van de verslagperiode geresulteerd in het toen verschenen “Handboek Telecommunicatierecht”, dat een complete behandeling van het Nederlandse telecommunicatierecht biedt. Het telecommunicatierecht maakt een stormachtige ontwikkeling door en biedt vele mogelijkheden voor academische pioniersarbeid. Het Instituut voor informatierecht maakt van deze mogelijkheden op zeer goede wijze gebruik. De relevantie van het onderzoek op dit terrein valt moeilijk te overschatten.

Over de duurzaamheid en de relevantie van dit programma maakt de Commissie zich geen zorgen gezien de voor zichzelf sprekende relevantie van het onderwerp, de gestructureerde werkwijze van dit programma, de goede kwaliteit en de werfkracht die het programma heeft om additionele middelen aan te trekken.

5. INSTITUUT VOOR INFORMATIERECHT / INSTITUTE FOR INFORMATION LAW (IViR)

Programmaleiders: prof. dr. P.B. Hugenholtz, prof. dr. N.A.N.M. van Eijk en dr. M.M.M. van Eechoud.

5.1. Korte beschrijving

5.1.1. Missie en probleemstelling

Het Instituut voor Informatierecht (IViR) stelt zich ten doel bij te dragen aan de ontwikkeling van het informatierecht tot een evenwichtig kader dat tegemoetkomt aan de behoeften van de informatiesamenleving. Informatierecht wordt daarbij omschreven als het recht dat betrekking heeft op de productie, de marketing, het transport en het gebruik van informatieproducten en -diensten.

Het IViR werd opgericht in 1986 en het heeft zich ontwikkeld tot een erkend zwaartepunt van onderzoek van faculteit en universiteit. Het heeft een eigen documentatiecentrum met eigen documentalisten en het biedt een eenjarige masteropleiding Informatierecht aan, evenals een tweearige onderzoeksmaстер op hetzelfde gebied. De leiding van het IViR wordt geadviseerd door een eigen Wetenschappelijke Adviesraad.

5.1.2. Opbouw en onderdelen

In de periode 2005-2010 richt IViR zich in het bijzonder op een zevental onderwerpen: (1) het ontwikkelen van een algemene theorie van het informatierecht; (2) vrijheid van meningsuiting en andere communicatierechten; (3) privacybescherming; (4) intellectuele eigendomsrecht; (5) zakelijke communicatie; (6) overheidsinformatie; en (7) media en telecommunicatie.

5.1.3. Disciplines en vakgebieden

Informatierecht is een dynamisch veld, dat sterke interacties kent met sociale, economische en technologische ontwikkelingen. Dat is de reden dat het instituut voortdurend in contact wil blijven met de praktische en sociale werkelijkheid van de informatiemaatschappij. IViR-onderzoekers zijn van mening dat zij niet alleen academici zijn maar ook een sociale rol dienen te vervullen.

5.1.4. Onderzoeksmethoden

Hoewel de zelfstudie hierover weinig informatie verschaft, neemt de commissie aan dat het onderzoek wordt verricht in overeenstemming met de binnen de rechtswetenschap gebruikelijke onderzoeksmethoden. Uit de facultaire informatie blijkt dat het rechtsvergelijkend onderzoek in toenemende mate wordt gericht op de vergelijking tussen systemen en niet tussen landen. De groeiende invloed van het Europese recht binnen het informatierecht is hier mede debet aan. Geregeld zou er ook sprake zijn van onderzoek met een interdisciplinair karakter.

5.1.5. Kwantitatieve informatie

De onderzoeksformatie van het instituut was als volgt:

Hoogleraren	0,93	1,00	0,75
Ander vast WP	1,81	2,45	2,08
Promovendi	4,13	4,83	4,58

5.2. Beoordeling

5.2.1. Kwaliteit: 4,50

De door het IViR aangeleverde kernpublicaties zijn alle van uitstekende kwaliteit, doch opvallend is wel dat 4 van de 8 betrekking hebben op een auteursrechtelijk onderwerp. Het aantal publicaties op het gebied van een algemene theorie van het informatierecht is beperkt. Nagenoeg de helft van het aantal wetenschappelijke publicaties verschijnt in internationale tijdschriften en niet-Nederlandstalige boeken. Speciale vermelding verdient het boek European Media Law van Van Castendyk, Dommering en Scheuer (2008), een artikelsgewijs commentaar van meer dan 1.300 pagina's op de Europese mediawetgeving op het gebied van radio en tv, een heus monnikenwerk.

Ook de andere output van het IViR wordt hoog gewaardeerd. Het instituut heeft een zeer uitgebreide portefeuille aan tweede en derde geldstromonderzoek. Opdrachten voor contractonderzoek kwamen van EU-instellingen, van diverse ministeries en van andere instellingen in binnen- en buitenland. Beleid is dat alle resultaten van contractonderzoek gepubliceerd worden, dan wel worden omgewerkt tot wetenschappelijke publicaties. Het instituut was zeer succesvol in het aantrekken van fondsen uit het NWO-programma IT en Recht (ITeR). Recentelijk werd een Veni-aanvraag gehonoreerd. De senior stafleden geven regelmatig les aan buitenlandse instellingen, zijn lid van de redacties van tijdschriften en participeren in nationale en Europese advieslichamen.

Zoals uit de missie van het IViR en uit de kernpublicaties blijkt, is het IViR-onderzoek voornamelijk juridisch en monodisciplinair van aard, zij het dat meerdere vakgebieden binnen de rechtswetenschap worden bestreken. Hoewel een substantieel deel van het onderzoek van IViR contractonderzoek is, blijken ook die publicaties wel degelijk bij te dragen aan theorievorming, in het bijzonder de studies over het auteursrecht in opdracht van de Europese Commissie. Ook de vier dissertaties in de periode 2006, 2007 en 2008 bevatten belangwekkende theoretische bijdragen.

De samenhang echter zou beter kunnen. De zeven vermelde onderzoeksonderwerpen lijken geen gedeelde probleemstelling te hebben en in die zin lijkt het programma uit zeven afzonderlijke bouwstenen te bestaan. Daarbij zijn drie bouwstenen – vrijheid van meningsuiting en andere communicatierechten; intellectueel eigendomsrecht; en media en telecommunicatie – aanzienlijk groter dan de ander vier. Onderzoek op het gebied van privacybescherming raakte enigszins onderbelicht door het vertrek van leidende onderzoekers. De leiding van het IViR nam en neemt actie.

Originaliteit staat wel hoog in het vaandel. Vanaf het begin heeft het IViR zich gekenmerkt door informatie en informatierecht centraal te stellen, dus los van de techniek waarmee die informatie wordt geproduceerd, op de markt gezet, getransporteerd of gebruikt. ICT speelt daarin uiteraard en rol en is een belangrijke bron van nieuwe vragen en problemen, maar het IViR heeft altijd een techniekonafhankelijk perspectief willen hanteren. Die invalshoek is origineel en binnen en buiten Nederland uniek. Als strikt juridisch instituut is het niet verwonderlijk dat in het onderzoek de klassieke rechtswetenschappelijke methoden domineren.

Ook samenwerking is een sterk punt. Het IViR beschikt over een zeer uitgebreid internationaal netwerk en er wordt structureel samengewerkt met gerenommeerde – soms zelfs leidende – buitenlandse onderzoekscentra. Binnen Nederland wordt vooral samengewerkt met het Tilburg Institute for Law, Technology and Society (TILT) en binnen enkele multidisciplinaire samenwerkingsvormen. Het IViR heeft een aanhoudende stroom buitenlandse bezoekers, mede vanwege het eigen documentatiecentrum, en de IViR-staf wordt frequent uitgenodigd voor buitenlandse conferenties.

5.2.2. Productiviteit: 4,50

De productiviteit van het instituut is goed tot zeer goed. Er is gelet op het aantal fte onderzoek een groot aantal wetenschappelijke publicaties geleverd, het aantal vakpublicaties is zeer redelijk. Het aantal afgeronde promoties blijft achter, gelet op het aantal lopende promotieonderzoeken.

5.2.3. Relevantie: 4,50

De wetenschappelijke relevantie blijkt uit de bijdrage van het IViR-onderzoek aan (rechtswetenschappelijke) theorievorming en doctrine. De maatschappelijke relevantie van het onderzoek is uitermate hoog, vooral vanwege het grote aantal rapporten en studies in opdracht van beleidsmakers. Veel van die rapporten hebben aantoonbare invloed gehad op internationale, Europese en nationale beleidsontwikkelingen. Er zijn nauwe banden met de rechtspraktijk, omdat ook daar bij voortdurend nieuwe informatierechtelijke vragen en problemen opduiken.

5.2.4. Haalbaarheid/vitaliteit: 4,25

Recentelijk heeft het IViR het vertrek van een aantal bepalende hoogleraren weten op te vangen, mede omdat ervaren onderzoekers gereed stonden de leiding over te nemen. De recentelijk bevestigde erkenning als facultair en universitair zwaartepunt (centre of excellence) geeft vertrouwen voor de toekomst. Wat het informatierecht betreft: vast staat dat dit ook de komende jaren sterk in beweging zal blijven en dat de behoefte aan wetenschappelijke theorievorming, beleidsadviesering en praktijkadvies eerder groter zal worden dan kleiner. Het IViR lijkt een redelijke balans te vinden tussen enerzijds eerste, en anderzijds tweede en derde geldstroom. Echter, de meest gewichtige onzekerheid – ook erkend in de eigen SWOT-analyse – is de sterke afhankelijkheid van derdegeldstroominkomsten. Het verwerven daarvan legt een aanmerkelijk beslag op de tijd van de senior staf en de onderzoeksagenda wordt in belangrijke mate aangestuurd door vragen van beleid en niet door wetenschappelijke overwegingen.

5.2.5. Eendoordeel: 4,50
